Not illustrated. 1913 Excerpt: . . . grades very gently east to the salt marshes and mud flats of the shores. Geology. -- The yellow, buff, and gray loams and sands of the Talbot cover practically the entire surface of the county. The maximum thickness of the Talbot on the east side of the county is uncertain, but may amount to 50 feet. Below the Columbia lie Chesapeake, Pamunkey, Upper Cretaceous, and Potomac beds. The base of the Chesapeake beds on the east side of the county is about 600 feet below-sea level. Beneath are about 150 feet of Pamunkey, 500 feet of Upper Cretaceous, and 900 feet of Potomac beds, the crystalline rocks lying perhaps 2. 250 feet below sea level. UNDERGROUND WATERS. Distribution and quality. --The water table lies near the surface, and dug and driven wells get water at from 5 to 15 feet. The quality of the ground water is variable. Along the shores wells are liable to become salty under heavy pumping, and where the surface loams and sands are thin, wells go down into shell beds which yield hard water. The Chesapeake sands are uncertain water-bearers. The sands are local and seldom yield free flows. The water is iron-bearing in the upper beds and brackish in the deeper ones. Springs. --There are no springs of commercial importance in the county. Most of the so-called springs are very shallow wells, dug in hollows where the water table is but a foot or two below the surface; many used...
