New Series, Vol. i. Part II Commentary on the Psalms. Translated from the German of E. W. Henostenbehg, by the Rev. P. Fairbairen, Salton, and the Rev. J. Thomson, Leith. Edinburgh: Thomas Clark. 1845. This number of the Biblical Cabinet carries on Hengstenberg s Commentary as far as to the end of Psalm xxxiv. It is all characterised by minute and discriminating criticism; and the translation improves in perspicuity and ease as it proceeds. The author ever seeks to arrive at the obvious and unforced sense of the original, and is admirably successful in pointing out the bearing of the context upon the settlement of a verbal difficulty; nor does the fact that he avails himself of the labours of his predecessors diminish the value of the work. We may briefly notice his mode of treating Psalm xviii. as a good illustration of his general manner. The structure of the psalm is first noticed--traces of skill in its composition--its authorship--its superscription. Then follow some excellent remarks on the repetition of this Psalm in 2 Sam. xxii., maintaining the position that the variations in the two editions of the same song are the result of express design. We cordially agree in the substance of the author s remarks on this subject, excepting only his unguarded, and, as it appears to...
