The universal cry is for practical men. Modern philosophy, in harmony with the times, is experimental - rejects mysticism, tends to rationalism, and deals chiefly with great material questions. It demands leaders and laborers whose intellectual habits have been moulded in the schools of experience; and the tendency is everywhere seen to subordinate, almost to ignore, those studies and pursuits which do not, to the popular understanding, appear to keep step with what is called the march of improvement. Success is accepted as at once the test and the measure of ability, whether we speak of the triumphs of the forum, the cabinet, the sacred desk, the pursuits of commerce and industry, or whatever department of intellectual labor is taken as the standard of comparison. We cannot object to the judgment which is rendered upon this issue, provided the success is a genuine fruit of labor and talent, combined with the training of experience, and is not the offspring of a lucky accident. Mankind never fail to appreciate him who has at once the power and the disposition to serve them in whatever sphere of usefulness or honor he may elect. Just in proportion to his power and willingness to serve will he be used. It matters not whether he makes bad poetry or bad bargains, society has no use for such, and the unfortunate author of either is left in merited obscurity.
